Bad years (GDP growth below 1 percent) are often conducive to reforms, except for labor reforms, as are recoveries after periods of prolonged weakness in growth (more than one bad year in the previous three years).

Source: IMF staff calculations.

Good times denote years for which real GDP growth was above 1 percent.