Africa has been resilient during the global recession. There are indications that economic conditions are improving, driven by domestic demand and higher commodity prices. Policies have played an important role in supporting domestic demand.